Not illustrated. 1807 Excerpt: . . . still recur to home for tranquillity, we long to die in that spot which gave us birth, and in that pleasing expectationopiate every calamity. You now therefore perceive, that I have some intentions of leaving this country; and yet my designed departure fills me with reluctance and regret. Though the friendships of travellers are generally more transient than vernal snows, still I feel an uneasiness at breaking the connections I have formed since my arrival; particularly I shall have no small pain in leaving my usual companion, guide, and instructor. I shall wait for the arrival of my son before I set out. He shall be my companion in every intended journey for the future: in his company I can support the fatigues of the way with redoubled ardour, pleased at once with conveying instruction, and exacting obedience. Adieu. From Lien Clii Altangi to Fum Hoam. After a variety of disappointments, my wishes are at length fully satisfied. My son, so long expected, is arrived, at once by his presence banishing my anxiety, and opening a new scene of unexpected pleasure. His improvements in mind and person have far surpassed even the sanguine expectations of a father. I left him a boy, but he is returned a man; pleasing in his person, hardened by travel, and polished by adversity. His disappointment in love, however, had1 infused an air of melancholy into his conversation, which seemed at intervals to interrupt our mutual satisfaction. I expected that this...
